

Kathleen Cartmell, Ph.D., M.P.H.

Associate Professor
Clemson University
Clemson, South Carolina

Dr. Kathleen Cartmell is a health services researcher with a focus on dissemination and implementation of evidence-based strategies for increasing use of vaccinations and tobacco cessation. She received her Ph.D. degree from the Medical University of South Carolina in health and rehabilitation sciences and her master of public health degree from the Emory University Rollins School of Public Health. Most of her research focuses on developing and testing interventions to optimize vaccination (Covid, HPV) and tobacco cessation at the health system and community levels. Dr. Cartmell also conducts research in India and Kenya, designed to optimize the delivery of palliative care in low resource settings.
