

David Dunning, Ph.D.

Professor of Psychology
University of Michigan
Ann Arbor, Michigan

David Dunning is a professor at the University of Michigan and a social psychologist focusing primarily on the psychology underlying human misbelief. Dunning's most cited work shows that people hold flattering opinions of their character and competence that cannot be justified from objective evidence, work supported by the National Institute of Mental Health, the National Science Foundation and the Templeton Foundation. An author of over 150 journal articles, book chapters and general interest pieces, he is half of the team responsible for describing the infamous Dunning-Kruger effect. In 2016, Dunning was awarded the Distinguished Lifetime Career Award from the International Society for Self and Identity. He has also been a fellow at the Center for Advanced Studies in the Behavioral Sciences. Dunning holds a B.A. degree from Michigan State University and a Ph.D. degree from Stanford University, both in psychology.
