

Adora Williams, CEBS

NFLPA Director of Benefits
NFL Players Association
Washington D.C.

Adora Williams, CEBS, is a benefits professional with more than 25 years of experience managing, administering, and overseeing complex employee benefit plans, including health and welfare, retirement, ancillary, and collectively bargained Taft-Hartley plans. Throughout her career, she has focused on educating and empowering members and employees while strengthening the valuable benefit plans they rely on.

As Director of Benefits for the NFLPA, Adora is part of the team responsible for negotiating, implementing, and overseeing a benefits package of nearly $15 billion, including retirement, disability, and health and welfare plans for active and retired NFL players. The NFLPA is a professional sports union that protects the interests and welfare of NFL players, serves as their exclusive bargaining representative, and has a long history of ensuring proper recognition and representation of players' interests.

Adora holds a master's degree in Human Resources and Employment Relations, with a concentration in Employment and Labor Law, from Penn State University, as well as a bachelor's degree from James Madison University.