Mr. Brown is a military veteran and is director for the OSI-CAN Support Initiative. Prior to this he was employed with the Canadian Mental Health Association of Saskatchewan (CMHA SK) in the Justice Community Support Program. OSI-CAN provides mental health support to veterans, public safety personnel and their families. Their mission is to inspire hope and contribute to the continuous well-being of veterans and public safety personnel dealing with occupational stress injury. Mr. Brown is a member of the Saskatchewan Peer Support Network, which works to improve peer support within the province through mentorship, sharing of best practices and the establishment of an information network. He is also a member of the SK First Responders Mental Health Committee, which was established to work toward a common goal of reducing mental health stigma, improving access to resources, and providing leadership and recommended practices that promote positive mental health for first responders/public safety personnel across the province.
